TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 9, 1875. POETICAL.

HIS LAST CHARGE TO THE OLD STONEWALL BRIGADE.

The last words of the great Jackson were: "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees." Bear me gently, boys, over the river. And let me quietly rest in the shade;

But this parting shall not be forever Of your leader and his gallant brigade. You have covered my name, boys, with glory, And soon for me will the conflict be o'er; But by the fields you have won, grand and gory, You must follow your leader once more.

By your glorious campaign in the Valley. You have made immortal your valorous hand; But, soldiers, once again your must rally; Obey once again your leader's command.

In painful night watches-long and dreary,

After watching, boys, and fasting all day, You have pressed forward, wayworn and weary And you have always been first in the fray. In our dread war-path we have left lying Some of our comrades, like soldiers asleep,

And to-day bath its wounded and dying-May God pity the poor women who weep. The shadows of death darken o'er me, And my strength is ebbing slowly away; The last battle of life is before me,.

And the vict'ry will be won before day. One more dark River to cross over. And another Valley still to pass through. And then, boys I will rest under cover Of the bulwarks that remain for the true.

In this hour of parting, still and solemn, The last order of your leader is made: Soldiers! "present" in unbroken column, To our High Captain, the Stonewall Brigade When our Master His muster roll calleth,

O! let every warrior be at his post, And when one of my countrymen falleth. Heaven will gain what our army hath lost. I leave with a soldier's firm affection The brigade that bath followed me thus far To the great and powerful protection

Of my Commander in peace and in War. Bear mergently then over the River. And let me quietly rest in the shade; And this parting shall not be forever Of your Leader and his callant Brigade. From the Bultimorean

MISCELLANEOUS.

STONEWALL JACKSON.

[From the Richmond Whig.] To the Editor of the Whig :- Everything which can illustrate the character of Jackson is of value and of especial interest now. In June, 1812, A. P. Hill, George E. Pickett, B. D. Fry and the writer, having passed our first week at the military academy, were standing together on the south side of the old South Barracks at West Point, when | bankrupt. His creditors hope he will. a cadet sergeant came by us conducting newly-arrived cadet to his quarters. This new-comer attracted our attention at onco .-He was apparently about 20 years of age. &c; was well grown; his figure was angular.

and clumsy; his gait was awkward. He was clad in OLD-FASHIONED VIRGINIA HOMESPUN woollen cloth; he bore across-his shoulders a pair of weather-stained saddle-bags, and his hat was one of those heavy low-crowned, broad-brimmed wool hats usually worn in those days by overseers, county constables, wagoners, &c. He tramped along by the side of the sergeant, with an air of resolution, and his stolid look added to the inflexible determination of his whole aspect, so that one of us remarked, "That tellow has here to stav. So much did he impress me that I made inquiry at once about him, and found he was from Virginia. I then sought him out and endeavored to show him some especial interest and to let him know he was not without friends in that strange land. He was not at all demonstrative, however, and seemed to be determined to hew out his own career by his own earnest energy.

HIS NAME WAS T. J. JACKSON! He had a right rough time in the academy at first; for his want of previous training placed him at a disadvantage, and it was all he could do to pass his first examination. We were studying algebra, and maybe analytical geometry that winter, and Jack-son was very low in his class standing. All lights were put out at "taps;" but just before the signal he would pile his grate up with the anthracite coal, and lying prone before it on the floor, would work away at his lessons by the glare of the fire, which scorehed his very brain, till a late hour in the

This evident determination to succeed not only aided his own efforts directly, but impressed his instructors in his favor, and he rose steadily year by year till we used to say, Jack' would be head of the class."

By the fourth year he attained a position during the carly years of the course, and in brought his average below the point to which he had actually attained by the end of our In the riding-hall I think his suffering must have been great—he had a very rough horse and when the order came to "cross stirrups" and "trot," "Old Jack" swayed about and struggled hard to KEEP ON HIS HORSE, &c. When we had advanced to riding at the heads, leaping the bars, &c., his equitation riding-house would take more risks than he, and certainly no one had our good wishes for success and safety more than he. I believe he went through the very trying ordeal of the four years at West Point without ever having a hard word or hard feeling for or from cadet or professor. And while there were many who seemed to surpass him in the graces of intellect, in geniality, in good-more absolutely possessed the respect and confidence of all than he did. I met him after we separated at West Point in the autumn of 1846 at Camargo, Mexico. He had come down from Monterey to take up SOME SIEGE GUNS TO GEN. TAYLOR, and the squadron of mounted rifles to which I belonged was ordered to escort those guns. The route was pretty rough, the guns were very heavy, and the energy, the resource, the concentration on the arduous duty, before him, which Jackson evinced, impressed us all with the fact that he was a great "duty of-

Some years afterwards Jackson came up to West Point from his station at Governor's Island to visit several of us, his classmates. who had been ordered to duty at the academy after the close of the Mexican war. Me Olellan was of our number. We had a very large and pleasant mess, and Jackson sojourned several days with us. He had then become hypocondriacal. He had queer ideas about his health; he thought one side of him was heavier than the other, and sometimes would raise one hand up to the arm's length to let the blood flow downwards, and lighten that arm. He told me then that he was about to accept a professorship at Lexington, whither he soon after went.

I next saw him, at a distance, in HIS CAMP AT MANASSAS, has it been my privilege to see him. His was a pure and simple character. had the true afflatus of war; and there was go to the poor house. no self-seeking in all his greater career, there was that inevitable expansion of character, and of consciousness of his capacity, which grew by what it fed on, and pointed out to

th T may not be generally known, yet it is probably true, that the famous novel of East Lynne, although written in England, had the ground work of its story in a singular marriage, which took place in this city, the notice and attending circumstances at the time being copied by almost every paper in the country. The matter was about as follows : A Mr. J. M., a clerk in a down town house, fell in love with a young lady, whose father was a well to do Second street merchant, and after a proper season of attention the couple were married :

Both soon found that they were not happily mated, and after a marriage of seven years, during which time they had three children (two boys and a girl) they mutually agreed to the husband applying for a divorce, merely on the ground of incompatibility of temper. The divorce was granted, and the wife went home to her father, who had through indorsing lost his business and all his property. The daughter's and his own misfortune weighed so heavily on the father's mind that during a moment of mental alienation he took his own life, leaving his daughter penniless, and to rough it with the cold charity of the world as best she could. The woman, a brave little creature, tried every way she knew how to gain an honest livelihood; in fact working so hard giving music lessons two days after the first battle, and never again and doing embroidery for her old school-mates that her health gave way, and having no money to pay her board, must beg, starve, or

To turn to the other side of the picture, the husband, after a months' release from the marital bands, again married, and at the time of which we speak had not only the children by the first wife, but also in addition thereto a little two year old girl by the second wife. The latter lady being ill, the husband advertised for a nurse and housekeeper, which notice General J * * * says that two or three days reached the eye of the first wife, and she, in plied for the position in his household. husband knew not what to say-but after givlowing morning, promising to consult his wife

Promptly as per agreement wife No. 1 was on time, as was the husband, and from there they went to the residence where the two wives had their first conversation, ending in their agreement for the first wife to come and accept the vacant place, which she did seemingly delighted at having a peaceful home over her shead, notwithstanding the very strange circumstances under which such sholter was given. Necessity demanded that the entire past should be obliterated, and the new housekeeper troated as any other help; that she must care for the children -her own offspring-and the other child, as any hired nurse would do; that she must eat at the secand table to care for her charges. All these things and even more humility did the poor woman show, never by sign, word or look, exhibiting the least evidence of discontent. What, however, must have been the true feeling of her heart, when seeing another filling the place that she had once tried, as she thought, so hard to fill ! The above is from files of an old Cincinnati paper, but the see - Will Settle is the name of a Wisconsin krupt. His creditors hope he will.
- The first of a fleet of iron-clad vessels narrated. When the cholera was raging in our city in 1856 the second wife was taken very ill with it, and being informed by the physician that she could live but a few hours at most, as she was then taken in a collapsed condition, she asked that all go out of the room excepting her husband and housekeeper, when she told how much she dreaded leaving her little child amongst strangers, and as a dying wife entreated them both to marry again. The proposition was a strange one, but both promised, and in a few mouths afterward, when the second wife had been dead a sufficient length of time not to cause remarks, the two were again married, brought together after a cruel separation of so many years, and, we believe, are now living happily together in a cosy West End house. The Game of Shadow Buff.

The old English game of blind man's buff so well known, that the mere mention of its name will be sufficient to convince our readers that it is the origin of Shadow Buff. much played on the Continent : and from the fun it affords, well worthy of taking a prominent place among our family Christmas sports. The game is as follows: First of all, we hang up a sheet or tablecloth against the wall, whereon to "cast the shadow." of the sheet and eight or ten feet from it, we are to place a lamp or one good light upon a pecting for a location for a large colony of table, in order that the shadow or profile of any person standing between the light and sheet, may fall thereon. The company being assembled, "Buff" is chosen either by vote or lot, or is, peradventure, a volunteer. Buff. has now to sit upon a very low stool, about four or five feet from the wall and look stead. fastly for the "coming shadow." The merry company now pass in procession between the light upon the table and Buff, who forfeits if he turns his head in the least degree. As the profiles pass before him he must name successively the person to whom the image belongs. The mistakes he makes occasion much merriment, especially if each person whose turn it is to "cast a shadow," endeavors in every way to disguise his identity; by stooping if tall, tip-toeing if short, by grimace or centertion; putting on a long mask nose, and doing other funny things. However, as some persons invariably "cast their shadows before," Buff guesses right at last; and he who till now helped to make the fun, must take his turn upon the stool, to be made fun of.
